ABSTRACT

This study aims to examine the political behavior of first-time voters regarding the 2024 Presidential Election in Olimeyala Village, Biluhu Sub-District, Gorontalo Regency. This study is motivated by the low level of political participation among first-time voters in the presidential election. The findings show that the political behavior of first-time voters in Olimeyala Village is influenced by several factors, such as a lack of understanding of democracy, limited political participation, and insufficient awareness of rights and obligations as citizens. This study is expected to contribute to efforts in increasing the political participation of first-time voters and to building awareness of the importance of democracy in society. This study examines the political behavior of first-time voters regarding the 2024 Presidential Election in Olimeyala Village. The findings also indicate that the level of participation among first-time voters is influenced by sociological, psychological, and rational choice factors. Sociological factors, such as social structure, norms, and social interaction, play a significant role in influencing access to political information and opportunities for participation. Psychological factors, including motivation, political awareness, personal experience, self-confidence, and understanding of rights and obligations, also determine their participation in the democratic process. Meanwhile, the rational choice approach shows that first-time voters in the village make political decisions logically based on the candidates' vision, mission, capabilities, and integrity. The inhibiting factors of political awareness among first-time voters include limited political education, lack of effective socialization, and political apathy. Therefore, it is expected that a more democratic, just, prosperous, and stable society can be fostered in Olimeyala Village. Furthermore, this study contributes to the theory of political behavior and democratic participation and provides recommendations for election organizers and the government to improve the quality of democracy in Indonesia.

INTRODUCTION

Indonesia is a democratic country. This democracy is understood in Indonesia as part of the influence of the concept of modern democracy. From the beginning of independence to the era of democratic reform, it has undergone different changes and patterns. The practice of democracy based on the Constitution has experienced the development of democracy in three periods. a) The period of the Republic of Indonesia I, which is a democratic period that prominent the role of parliament and parties that at that time were called parliamentary democracy; b) The period of the Second Republic of Indonesia, namely guided democracy which in many respects has deviated from constitutional democracy which is formally the foundation and shows aspects of people's democracy; c) The period of the Republic of Indonesia III, which is the period of Pancasila democracy which is a constitutional democracy highlighting presidential democracy, this period ended at the same time as the fall of the New Order regime which then Indonesian democracy entered a new era called the reform era, which began with the amendment of the 1945 Constitution by highlighting more real political freedom and strengthening the presidential system.(Lutpiani, 2021)

The state government system is a system of relations and working procedures between State institutions or the three axes of power, namely the executive, legislative, and judicial. The government system is related to the mechanism that the government carries out in carrying out its duties. Broadly speaking, the system of government is divided into two types, namely the presidential system of government and the parliamentary system of government. Meanwhile, Sri Soemantri mentioned the third system, namely the quasi government system. This quasi-government system is defined as a system of government that contains elements that exist in the presidential system as well as those contained in the parliamentary system of government. The Government System can be interpreted as a structure consisting of legislative, executive and judicial functions that are interconnected, cooperate and influence each other. Thus, the system of government is the way state institutions work with each other. According to Jimly Asshidiqie, the government system is defined as a system of relationships between state institutions. Meanwhile, according to Sri Soemantri, the Government System is a relationship between the legislative and executive institutions. Ismail Suny, has the opinion that the government system is a certain system that explains how the relationship between the highest state equipment in a country. Regarding the system of government, it is generally distinguished into two main systems, namely the presidential and parliamentary systems, outside of these two systems are mixed systems or parliamentary power or presidential power, there is also called the referendum system. Where the referendum system of the executive body is part of the legislative body called the legislative worker body. In this system, the legislative body forms a sub-body in it as the executor of government duties. Control of the legislature is carried out directly through referendums.(Cora, 2013)

General elections starting from legislative elections to two presidential elections can be carried out safely, honestly and fairly. Elections that are held directly by electing candidates from both legislative and executive candidates, give the people the freedom to choose their own candidates. After the 1998 reform, there have been many fundamental changes that have occurred in the Indonesian constitutional system. Among them was the 1999 election which was multiparty, where the reopening of the opportunity for political parties to move freely meant establishing a new party.<sup>1</sup> Then what was very significant happened in the 2004 election yesterday, in addition to the multiparty, the last 2004 election was the first election in which the people directly elected their representatives. The general election in 2004 was certainly the first general election that gave the people the freedom to vote directly.(Study et al., 2014)

The term political participation will refer to those voluntary activities by which members of a society share in the selection of rulers and, directly or indirectly, in the formation of public policy. What is mainly covered are actions aimed at influencing government decisions, although the main focus is broader but abstract, namely efforts to influence the authoritative allocation of values for a society. In relation to new countries, Samuel P. Huntington and Joan M. Nelson in No Easy Choice: Political Participation in Developing Countries give a broader interpretation by explicitly including illegal and violent acts. Political participation is the activity of citizens who act as individuals, which is intended to influence decision-making by the government. Participation can be individual or collective, organized or spontaneous, steady or sporadic, peaceful or violent, legal or illegal, effective or ineffective. (By political participation we mean activity by private citizens designed to influence government decision making. Participation may be individual or collective, organized or spontaneous, sustained or sporadic, peaceful or violent, legal or illegal, effective or ineffective). In democratic countries, the concept of political participation starts from the understanding that sovereignty is in the hands of the people, which is carried out through joint activities to determine the goals and future of the society and to determine the people who will hold the reins of leadership. Members of society who participate in political processes, for example through voting or other activities, are motivated by the belief that through such joint activities their interests will be channeled or at least taken care of, and that they can more or less influence the actions of those in authority to make binding decisions. In other words, they believe that their activities have a political effect (political efficacy).("Fundamentals of Political Science," 2017)

Critical novice voters will certainly exercise their right to vote by analyzing and criticizing government performance. This type of novice voter is usually a voter who has a higher education and is also active in the organization. On the other hand, novice voters because they have just used their first voting rights tend to be easier to influence. This type of voter is usually a voter who does not have full awareness to use the right to vote properly. The motivating factor is the lack of interest in the political world, so in making choices they tend to resign themselves and follow the choices of others. The readiness of novice voters is determined by voters' awareness in using their voting rights to the maximum. This means that in determining voters' choices, they really analyze intelligently, in the hope of getting a leader who is really able to carry out and carry out the mandate well. This awareness also cannot be separated from political education, political education has a very important role, especially for novice voters. Considering that novice voters are easier to influence. Political education can be provided by the KPU, or through formal education, for example in schools and universities. When novice voters get political education, there is indirectly an effort to foster awareness for novice voters to make choices intelligently, especially in general elections. (Arumsari & Nugraheni, 2018a)

Novice voters who have just entered voting age also do not have a wide political reach to determine where they should vote. So, sometimes what they choose is not as expected. This reason causes novice voters to be very vulnerable to being influenced and approached with a political material approach to the interests of political parties. Ignorance in practical political matters, especially with choices in elections or regional elections, makes novice voters often not think rationally and think more about short-term interests. Novice voters are often only used by political parties and politicians for their political interests, for example used for fundraising and the formation of party underbow organizations. (Study et al., 2014)

Olimeyala Village, located in Biluhu District in Gorontalo Regency, is one example of a village in Indonesia that has experienced serious challenges related to the behavior of novice voters in the presidential election. This village has unique social, political, and economic characteristics, which may affect the level of political participation of the community in it, in addition to that the village of Olimeyala is an interesting case study to dig deeper into the phenomenon of the behavior of novice voter participation in the 2024 Presidential election. With various existing social, economic, and political dynamics, Olimeyala Village is a representation of the various challenges faced in overcoming the lack of voter participation seen from the behavior of novice voters.

CONCLUSION

Based on the results of research in Olimeyala Village, Biluhu District, Gorontalo Regency, it can be concluded that the participation rate of novice voters in the 2024 Presidential Election is influenced by three main indicators, namely sociology, psychology, and rational choice. Sociological factors such as social structure, norms, and social interactions play an important role in influencing access to political information and participation opportunities, where political education and knowledge increase the activeness of novice voters. From psychological aspects, motivation, political awareness, personal experience, self-confidence, and understanding of rights and obligations also determine their participation in the democratic process. Meanwhile, the rational choice approach shows that novice voters in the village make political decisions logically based on the candidate's vision, mission, ability, and integrity, with careful consideration and critical analysis of issues and candidates, so that their choices reflect an orientation to problem-solving and common interests.

Based on the conclusions of the research, there are several factors that hinder the political awareness of novice voters towards the 2024 Presidential Election in Olimeyala Village, including the lack of political education in schools which leads to a lack of understanding of politics and government so that participation in the democratic process becomes low, lack of effective socialization from election organizers which makes information about the political process, rights, and obligations as citizens not is well conveyed, as well as political apathy in the social and family environment which has a negative impact on the involvement of young voters. These conditions have the potential to degrade the quality of democracy and produce leaders who are less responsive and accountable. Therefore, improving political education in schools, comprehensive and effective socialization of election organizers, and strengthening political awareness in the family and social environment are essential to encourage the active participation of novice voters, so as to create a more democratic, fair, prosperous, and stable society in Olimeyala Village.

SUGGESTION

The government and related parties are advised to develop comprehensive political education programs and conduct intensive socialization about the political process and the rights and obligations of citizens.

It is important to build social networks that support political participation and provide accurate and objective access to political information.

This effort must involve the active cooperation of all elements of society to increase collective awareness and create an environment conducive to democratic participation.
